Rome-Allocution of the Pope. Rome (Feb. 22) Telegram London Times.

At a secret consistory, held this morning, the Pope announced his intention to canonize ther Leonardo, of Porto Maurizio. His Holiness then delivered a short allocution, in which he adverted to his letter to King Victor Emanuel in 1865, written with the object of providing for the vacant bishoprics, and declared that the negotiations for that pur-pose, which have now been resumed, were not broken off through the fault of the Holy See. His Holiness lamented the fact that the bishops, whom he sends to empty churches, will find their property appropriated and their religious congregations expelled, adding:—

"They will find affletion and misery. Nevertheless, we send them for the salvation of souls. They will go in the name of Jesus Christ, con-noting in the protection of the Mother of God." His Holiness concluded by stating that it was not expedient to say more in the present state of things, but unless God interposed, the future was clearly to be foretold by the deplorable events which have already taken place. "Nevertheless," said his Holiness, "we must rely upon the protection of Heaven to change our sorrow into joy." The Pope then announced that he had pre-cognized several bishops, and hoped to be able to increase the number at future consistories. The number of bishops precognized this morning is thirty, two of whom are for France, three for the Island of Sicily, four for Tuscany two for the Marches, two for the patrimony of St. Peter, five for Hungary, one for Bavaria, one for Ireland, and hve in partibus.

The Paris Exhibition-A Gigantic Failure Anticipated. From the London Daily News, February 22.

The Paris Presse attributes the omission of any mention of the exhibition in the Emperor Napoleon's speech to his Majesty's dissatisfaction with the whole arrangements, and his ex-pectation that it will turn out a gigantic indure. According to the Presse, the general public takes little interest in the affair, and the prices fixed are altegether too high for most pockets. The writer goes on to say:-The external ap-cearance of the Exhibition Palace is far from pearance of the Exhibition Fainter's far from satisfying to the eye; it is vast, but without grandeur: low and heavy; of a sombre tone, which the lively colors of flags or hangings will not neutralize. The erection, which, from the entirely modern character of its destination, afforded full scope for the genius of an architect, afforded full scope for the genius of an architect, does not pre ent the great and pure lines which that art so willingly reproduces in France, nor has it the powerful originality which was so striking in the Crystal Palace.

Those who have had the privilege of pene trating into the interior speak in still less faverable terms. The oval form adopted in the construction does not permit any extent of view, and the eye falls upon column after column, which succeed each other perpetually like a moving wall. In this building which like a moving wall. In this building, which covers 150,000 square metres (about 182,000 square yards or 275 acres), space is wanting; there is not enough for the manufacturers of the departments, so rich in products of all kinds, tissues of silks, cotton, wool, embroidered or printed; perhaps there is not even sufficient for Parisian industry itself.

And then, with exorbitant tariffs, what be comes of the hospitality which France is under-stood to offer to manufactures and art? How are those two great principles which ought to preside over every universal exhibition, pre-serving its double character, national and pub-lic, to be realized and guaranteed, namely, that every facility might be offered to whoever can show a work of merit, and should also be provided for its examination by those who are interested in the review of efforts tending to the amelioration of material life and of the results acquired by their perseverance?

The writer declares that he does not intend discussing the question of price, but that the public is of opinion that the general good has been too much disregarded in favor of individual interest. The article then says:-"To these observations, which we have reproduced without enlarging on them, are added some fears which will probably be dissipated by a note in the Monieur. Those who are acquainted with the interior state of the works ask if, in fact, the palace can be open to the public on the 1st of April, and, in case the opening does not take place then, if the incomplete arrangements will not be of such importance that the Exhibition will run the risk of being lessened in the estimation of the foreigners constituting the first guests? We hope these apprehensions are exaggerated. The commerce of Paris awaits with legitimate impatience the movement which that accumulation of elegance and riches ought to produce. These exceptional and unforeseen augmentations in consumption form part of the benefits calculated on in a city like Paris; they re-establish the equilibrium in business which, in traversing such a period of activity, finds a compensation for the past and a stimulus for the future,"

He could not vote the honors of the Sonate to Mr. Peabody, who had done no more than many of his constituents, who had done as much as they were able for the cause of education. As the grant was for local, and not for mitional pursones, he thought is was for local legislation and not for Congress to express their thanks.
